MOUNT SAVAGE FIRE BRICKS, Manufactured at the Mount Savage Iron Works FOWLE & CO., Agents, Alexandria, Virginia

Lonaconing, Mn., August 31st, 1848. I take much pleasure in testifying to the excellence of the "Mt. Savage" Fire Bricks. I have nearly three years, for the lining or inwalls, and hearth of my Blast Furnace, and can say with Music given, Pianos tuned, Accordeons and confidence, that they are decidedly the best I ever used. I have been long familiar with the Stourbridge, and various Scotch and Welsh Fire Bricks. but if the choice were open to me, I should at all times give the Mt. Savage Fire Brick a decided preference. C. E. DETMOLD.

VULCAN WORKS, BALT. 20th Sept. 1848. We have no hesitation in giving our preference to the Mt. Savage Fire Bricks, over any that we have ever used. In lining our Air Furnaces we have mixed them with various brands of high character, and find them to bear the action of heat better, and last longer, than any of those with which we have tried them, and we consider them a better Brick than the "Gairnkirk," or any other Fire Brick in COMING DOWN.

The "stoop to conquer" principle is often a good one, where it can be honestly adopted .-One can leap the higher for going backwards a little, and the farther for taking weights in his hands. There is no country in the world where those of the richer class have greater need than in Virginia to take to heart a lesson which folks seem to be learning elsewhere. There was a day, under the old aristocratic regime, when fathers provident (they thought) of honor for their race, held it worse than a disparagement-a voluntary stigma-to design their educated children for any thing short of one or the other of the two leading learned professions, Law or Medicine. They seem to have taken it for granted that blood and intellect must go together, and that this their hereditary capacity to make a figure, must all run in one of these two lines. Accordingly, all the well-educated were condemned to be either lawyers or doctors or nothing. Thus these two pursuits soon become overstacked; while all others languished under the double disadvantage of the sense of disgrace attached to them and the denial of a liberal education. From this state of things it ensued that many could make no figure, nor even a livelihood, in the occupations thus ambitiously adopted; and a life of sloth at home or migration to the new States of the West became the alternative .-Even the latter sad choice did not, for a long time, induce any abandonment of this absurd article of the kind evermade or used in this country, system; but young men were deliberately bred up to vocations in which there was scarcely a hope except that of expatriating themselves: so that, by and by, the great west itself grew overral one may be well bestowed for some other us: for still something of the false old ideas lingers amongst us, and will have it that young lawyers or doctors of them. That great, but somewhat tardy teacher, Necessity-of whom we in this land of Abstractions learn most reluctantly-is beginning to instruct us whether we will or not, through the levelling of old fortunes, the rise of new, the diffusion of the practical Arts, the multiplication of Pursuits, the application of Knowledge as the main power in all of them. There is an Education of Fact which not all the false Theories in the world can keep back. Physical Improvement is at last actively on foot amongst us. On all sides, the advantages which it can confer are perceived and eagerly desired. Before this strong and fast-spreading public sense, that old vis mertice, the stand still policy, which called itself Republican and Jeffersonian, fought against every thing but the "Farming interest," hated commerce, canals, roads, banks, manufactures, every thing that required taxes, and Mrs. Sophronia Devallenger is a mulatto laly, who reads all the French novels and the Home Journal, and so cultivates a taste for those European refinements in social intercourse which some of our travelled gentlemen wish to introduce into this country. Mrs. D.'s husband is a shade darker than herself in complexion; he is a tobacconist by trade, and a very worthy, industrious and unsuspicious fellow. Mrs. D. has formed a platonic intimacy with a light lemon-colored D'Orsay, who calls himself Edward Berrington. While Mr. Devallenger is making segars and an honest living at his shop, Mrs. D. at home, is making tea and toast for Chevalier Berrington. But last night, Devallenger being taken with an ominous pain in the head, came home some two hours sooner than usual, and interrupted a tete-a-tete between shingles are by this coating quite equal to the Madam and Le Chevalier. No lady who has read a French novel can be embarrassed in such a case; a closet or a cupboard is the obvious resource. The only recess of this kind in the apartment was a place under the stairs, where Devallenger kept his unseasoned tobacco, extra pots of snuff, and various tools and materials for which there was no room in the shop. Into this "low-browed vault," by Madthe adroit lady, at the very moment Devallenger arrived. The honest tobacconist complained of his aching head, without assigning a cause for it, not imagining (poor fellow!) what an oppressive weight his os frontis had to sustain. Meanwhile, Chevalier Berrington, in the closet was fearful that his breathing might be overheard; to prevent which, he put his face into a large jar, which stood on the floor conveniently This jar contained snuff of a highly volatile nature; and, as Berrington drew his first breath inside of the vessel, a column of the titillating Chevalier, who still continued to sneeze in answer to each blow, though the whacks he re-BLE at very small cost; adding greatly to their Mayor. In answer to queries proposed by the latter, he magnanimously exclaimed: "Send me Silver's Plastic Stone sets quickly, and in a to jail for a thief, if you choose.
